VINTAGE RUMINATIONS

The magic of the 2018 harvest really began to appear in mid-August when the temperatures cooled again and basically remained sunny, mild and in the eighties for the remainder of the harvest season. The ripening from veraison to harvest occurred under absolutely picture perfect conditions. This long and slow harvest allowed for beautiful phenological ripening without the abrupt rise in sugar and corresponding dramatic drop in acidity that can result from typical heat spikes.

The harvest at JONATA was tremendous and began on September 15, 2018 with sangiovese and merlot being the only grapes brought in that month. The rainfall at the estate from the early October event was minimal. It basically acted to remove the dust from the clusters. The Jonata harvest was roughly 2 weeks later than in 2017 with slow and even ripening throughout. The large majority of red fruit was picked from October 10 through October 26 under clear blue skies.

2018 is one of those rare vintages (unicorn vintages, if you will...) when yields are healthy and quality is exceptional. The white wines are velvet in texture and absolutely full of tension and energy. The reds are defined by subtlety and elegance. They are a pleasure to taste. They appear to be similar to the 2017 reds with that same complexity and charm. These are very exciting wines. — Matt Dees Winemaker

ON THE WINE

Black plum and Asian five spice. The most aromatically captivating wine in the lineup. Startling. Stops you in your tracks. Everything is purple and black and perfumed. Tantalizing play between sweet, spicy and savory. As always, a soulful and sincere expression of this often misunderstood grape. Not lacking tannins, but rather enhanced by their surprising suppleness. Elegant, complex and graceful. Soy, balsamic, mulberry, white peppercorn and black tea. Fresh and refined. Invigorating finish with spirited acidity, fine and powdery structure and the essence of candied blackberry. 100% whole cluster petit verdot...what did you expect? — Matt Dees Winemaker
